They Prove The "Quality" Innocent

This Is the Count of Earl Robert, Which Gains Full Cooperation from the Police

WHILE, over a month of a century ago, a man was coming out of a Detroit hotel when a black sedan pulled up to the curb, and bullets from a hidden sub-machine gun riddled his body. In the next instant, four men escaped from the vehicle and began along going the victim into the car.

At the point, three members of a nearby house rushed toward the scene of the crime. Meanwhile, the killers changed their minds, and dumped the body into an alley while one of them held off the residents with a gun. Finally, the killers piled into their vehicle, and disappeared.

Police immediately set up a suspect. The victim was known to be a gambler, so reports were drawn from the known gamblers in town.

Among them was a man named Walter Hardy, a dealer from Montreal. Of all the gamblers questioned, Hardy was the only one who was unable to establish an alibi for last night.

To make matters worse for the dealer, a witness came forward to testify that Hardy resembled one of the killers in the back alley. Hardy was brought to trial, found guilty, and given a life sentence.

In prison, Hardy continued to protest his innocence. Then, about 25 years after his condemn, the prison physician became convinced by Hardy's story, picked up a phony in the women's cell and called Dr. Lehmayer Shepherd, a leading expert on the medical aspects of crime.

Dr. Shepherd picked a bag and left at once for the automobile manufacturing state. There, he questioned Hardy carefully and, satisfied that there were some grounds for doubt, reporting the prison's report to the medical body.

In a matter of days, a full investigating team moved into Detroit. Hardy was given a three-hour interrogation test, which indicated that he was innocent. Then the investigating team went into high gear.

One of their members found a witness who had deliberately kept evidence from the police.

"Why didn't you offer your evidence to the police?" he was asked.

The witness admitted to suspect that he had been ahead of the gang responsible for the killing. His evidence—that Walter Hardy was not one of the killers. Yes, he was proved.

Another member of the investigating team "tricked" down the eye-witness who had put the legs on Hardy during the trial. Under questioning, he broke down. His statement: "For the past five years, I've been sure that Hardy was not one of those four murderers!" ...

The investigating team gathered its members together—and placed its full findings before the magistrate at a District courtroom. Once again, Vince Hardy stood, head bowed, before the bench, but this time to hear himself declared a free man. He was later pardoned by an apologetic state government.

What you have just read is a true account of "The Court of Last Resort" in action. An unaffiliated body, the investigating team operates with the whole-hearted knowledge of the state's police forces, and goes into action after all legal appeals have failed.

The Court of Last Resort is composed of men nationally prominent in the field of crime: Life Sunday Garden, the country's best-selling crime writer; Raymond Chandler, world-famous detective; Alan Gregory, bi-detective expert; Henry Seager, noted publisher; Tom Smith, a former prison warden; Bob May, a field investigator; and Dr. Snyder, who figured so brilliantly in the Vince Hardy case.

Do the police want the assistance of the Court? Not at all. An one-of-a-kind unit it

"We initiate the investigations of the Court. After all, if, through circumstantial evidence or other means, a man has been wrongly found guilty, we want to know about it first. Sometimes, it takes ten years before best known to psychologists, criminologists go to a crime for some answers.

"We police have our duty—to arrest that man. Later, the man is freed by a jury of his peers. They deliberate the hours of the evidence, and they believe in the man, even though! What can they do? They had him guilty, and we know him as just.

"At the stage of the case, we must have out of the case. Now cases come up every day. We can't have an reviewing cases that are officially closed, can we?

"But, suppose that man was lying, perhaps to protect someone else? That's where the Court of Last Resort comes in. For them, a case is never closed, even after a man has been found guilty. Of course, they don't doubt an investigating unless they have pretty strong doubts about a man's guilt. As far as we're concerned, we're glad to have these answers then."

The above statement is more or less the general feeling held by police officials toward the Court. What has been the record of the Court since it went into business in 1949?

Thousands of cases have been referred to it for aid. Of these, about 1,000 cases have been considered and reported. The Court has investigated and cleared the innocence of 12 men charged guilty by juries. At present, more than 500 others are being processed.

Not only are police forces using the Court in every possible way, but other law and legal agencies are joining the ranks of Court supporters. Not long ago, almost a dozen former FBI men volunteered their services free, and the American Bar Association has already set up a special committee to work with the Court.

The Court doesn't stop operating for a case closed; even it has proven innocent. Knowing that the stigma of prison may make a shingle for the freed man to land a job and we back the support of his former friends, the Court continues to work in behalf of its "clients."

Vince Hardy the inmate was given a job in a hospital as a result of Dr. Snyder's efforts. Raymond Chandler, one of his own judges, supported the Hardy off a current imprisoned for a murder the Court was convinced he hadn't committed. Following the release of this man, he was given a job as coachman on Red Stanley Garden's ranch.

It is little wonder that the Court of Last Resort has won the admiration and support of the public.

There is a growing body of research on the effects of the environment on human health. This research suggests that the environment can have a significant impact on the health of individuals and communities. For example, exposure to air pollution can lead to respiratory problems, and exposure to lead can lead to developmental delays in children. Therefore, it is important to understand the environmental factors that can affect health and to take steps to reduce exposure to these factors.
